

An Evening with Ellen Roseman

An evening with Ellen Roseman, renowned personal finance and consumer issues columnist with the Toronto Star's business section.

Ellen will share with us her views on how to step up your defensive game in managing your money – and how the government is encouraging others to do the same thing through financial literacy campaigns.

- Are you on top of your personal finances? How you can survive and thrive in an uncertain economy when the old rules no longer work.
- You used to count on a steady job and generous pension when you left the work force. Even if you had a shortfall, you were unlikely to outlive your retirement savings.
- You expected to have a stable marriage and children who became self-sufficient at an early age. Today, divorce is a fact of life and even a university education doesn't guarantee jobs for young people.
- You relied on your financial advisers to be honest and ethical, not to enrich themselves at your expense in a system where they don't have a fiduciary duty toward their clients.

Join us on Thursday, May 19th, when Ellen Roseman, a person finance columnist at the Toronto Star, will deal with these and many more insightful issues.
